THE STORY OF THE SKY: HOT and COLD MERCURY

"Hey, what's the big rush?" shouted Susie Jason as Bart Cummings dashed by her waving a notebook.

"I'm on my way to our science club meeting," replied Bart over his shoulder.

"Science club? Oboy, can I join?" pleaded Susie, starting after him.

"That's a good one—imagine a girl scientist!" he snickered. "Don't delay me, kid," Bart went on. "We're studying astronomy today, beginning with the planet Mercury."

"Mercury? Oh, that's that cute little planet the ancient Greeks named after the messenger of the gods!" Susie announced. "Of course, they didn't know much about it because it's so small and far away."

"That's right," said Bart admiringly. "You can't see Mercury very well except for short times in the west at twilight or at daybreak in the east."

"Yes, even modern scientists haven't learned too much about this planet, even though they've been making scientific observations since the 18th century," Susie went on, "but we do know that it's the hottest and also the coldest of the planets."

"Huh, why is that?" marveled her friend.

"Well," said Susie, "Mercury is pretty close to the sun. The pull of the sun is so strong that Mercury can't turn on its axis as it goes around the sun."

"Then one side is always real hot and the other is real cold?" said Bart.

"Right," Susie informed him. "And it doesn't have atmosphere like we have on earth, so there probably isn't any life on Mercury."

"Gee, I didn't know that," murmured Bart admiringly.

"Sure," said Susie. "The air there is thin. That means it's made up of real heavy gases, like carbon dioxide—that's the gas that's dissolved in soda water."

"Furthermore," Susie went on, "it's like an awful desert on Mercury with a barren surface and high mountains. There isn't any kind of life or even any sound, because the thin gases around the planet can't carry sound waves."

"It sure would be something to explore a place like that, though," Bart reminded her.

"That won't be for centuries," said Susie loftily. "Mercury is 50 million miles from earth, and the round trip would take over a year."

"Golly," said Bart, taking her arm. "I take back what I said about girl scientists. C'mon—let's go! I'm going to nominate you for president of the Science club."

AROUND THE WORLD: THE RIO STORY

"Here comes that pest, Gabby Martin!" exclaimed Penny Bascomb, as the gang came out of the Sweet Shop.

"Yeah, pretend we don't see him," muttered Shorty Willett. "Every time he takes a trip ten miles from home he pesters you to pieces bragging about it."

"Hey, kids, wait for me. I want to tell you about my trip to Jimsonville last week," shrieked Gabby, approaching the crowd.

"Jimsonville, eh?" snorted Penny. "Well, I bet they haven't anything to compare with, er, Rio de Janeiro."

"Huh? Where's that?" stammered Gabby, taken aback.

"Oh, it's just the capital of Brazil," replied Penny loftily. "And it's about the most bee-oo-tiful city in the whole world. It's built around a harbor facing the Atlantic Ocean, and the beaches there are out of this world."

"Yeah, but Jimsonville is a real old town, and, and..." sputtered Gabby.

"It can't be as old as Rio!" continued Penny. "Why, Rio de Janeiro was started way back in January 1567. An explorer from Portugal started to sail for India, and landed on the coast of Brazil instead. Well, he claimed the land for the King of Portugal, and pretty soon others came along and started a colony. They named it Rio de Janeiro—that means 'River of January!'" she explained.

"Who cares?" exploded Gabby angrily. "Wait till you hear how Jimsonville..."

"But Rio didn't grow very fast until the 19th Century," Penny went on. "Then King John of Portugal chose it for his court in exile. And he opened up the port to commerce, and it really boomed."

"That's nothing," interrupted Gabby. "You should see Jimsonville."

"As I was saying," said Penny calmly, "Rio wasn't really much for looks until 1903. Then they started a campaign to beautify the city and now—Zowie! You can take cable car trips up to Sugar Loaf Mountain, and there's a wonderful big carnival every year in Rio!"

"Rio Schmio!" sneered Gabby. "You should see the glue works in Jimsonville."

"Glue works! Ugh!" sniffed Penny. "Rio de Janeiro is the commercial center of the country—it deals in coffee, cotton, diamonds!"

"Aw, I give up! I'm going home!" shouted Gabby angrily, as he walked off. "And I'm never going to tell you about any of my trips again!"

"What a break!" exclaimed Shorty Willett. "You sure shut him up, Penny. Gosh, I didn't know you had been to Brazil!"

"Who said I had?" replied Penny sweetly. "I was just reciting some things I learned in school."

Baby HUEY

the Baby GIANT and Blackbeard

NEW BROTHER!

It all started the day Betty brought Jim Sommers home for dinner. "He's just wonderful!" she whispered to Francie. "You'll just love him!"

But Francie didn't think there was anything wonderful about Jim Sommers at all. Why, he hardly even noticed her at dinner! He had eyes only for Betty. And worse yet, he seemed to make Betty and Mother and Daddy feel the same way! They didn't pay a bit of attention to Francie all through that first evening either!

It was a strange, lonely feeling for Francie. After all, she was the baby of the family, so everyone usually made a big fuss over her. It was hard to get used to being ignored! But for Betty's sake, she tried not to mind. Francie adored her older sister, and she wanted to please her. "Anyway, it's just for tonight!" she comforted herself. "Just till this Jim-person goes home!"

Only she was wrong! It wasn't "just for tonight" at all! For the very next day, Mother told her that Betty was going to marry Jim Sommers! And that's when the fun really began! Fun for everyone else, that is—not for Francie!

Nobody had time to bother with her any more, it seemed. Mother and Betty were always out of the house—shopping, shopping and shopping some more! Daddy was forever busy at his desk, drawing up lists, tearing them up, writing new ones! The telephone rang constantly, but none of the calls were for Francie. Jim Sommers was there practically every night. He tried to be friends now, but Francie held back, remembering how it had been the first time. Altogether, she was a very sad, very angry and very unhappy little girl!

And then one day, Mother called her into the sewing room. Betty was there, too. "Here, Francie," smiled Mother, "try this on!" She held out something pink and gauzy and tissue-soft.

"For me?" Francie gulped. "You made a dress for me?"

"Of course!" burst out Betty. "How can you be the flower girl at my wedding without a super-special dress?"

"Flower girl?" Francie echoed stupidly as the gown slipped over her head. "You mean you need me at the wedding...?"

"Why, there couldn't be any wedding without you, silly! Jim and I decided that before we even set the date! You have to walk down the aisle right in front of Dad and me!"

"Ohhh . . ." Francie caught sight of herself in the mirror. The pink gown floated around her like a cloud! Inside her head she could hear the Wedding March, could see herself drifting down the church aisle, scattering rose petals for the bride to walk on, doing her share to welcome her new brother into the family!

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

WHAT DID HE SAY?

The animals of Ace County were having an awful time. They just didn't know what to do. Never before had a problem like this come up. And they strutted back and forth searching for the answer.

"What to do? What to do?" muttered the owl wizard.

"I don't know! I don't know!" said the puzzled parakeet.

"We must do right," insisted the owl wizard.

"Right!" repeated the parakeet.

"So what do we do?" laughed the hyena.

"Gxmnb!" said the unknown animal that presented the problem.

All of them looked at this animal and he repeated, "Gxmnb!" Only louder.

"Oh, what kind of an animal are you?" asked the owl wizard. "Why can't you talk proper English? Why do you present such problems to we animals of Ace County?"

"Why?" repeated the parakeet.

"Zxcvbn!" insisted the strange animal.

"What was that he said?" asked the owl.

"Zxcvbn!" said the parakeet.

"Oh," said the owl. "This does not help us in the least. What can we do for this strange animal? We must treat him as kindly as we know how, yet we do not understand a word he says."

"Perhaps he speaks a foreign tongue," suggested the pretty smart squirrel.

"But of what nation?" said the owl.

"Lumenesia?" suggested the raccoon.

"He doesn't look Lumenese," said the owl.

"Ferdinandia?" asked the turtle.

"Hah!" laughed the owl. "Does this animal look Ferdinandian?"

"Fvnbcdm!" said the strange animal.

"Perhaps that is the name of his country!" laughed the hyena.

"What?" asked the owl.

"What he just said," said the raccoon.

"What did he just say?" asked the owl.

Each of the animals looked at each other. None of them could remember what this strange-talking animal had said.

"Perhaps he will repeat it," said the owl.

"Mnbdcfk!" said the strange animal.

"Was that it?" asked the owl.

"I don't know," said one and all.

The animals stopped talking for the moment. They decided to think this out in silence.

Meanwhile, the strange-talking animal was saying, "Fgjbkl kmnuumh yptghfd!"

Those last words brought a spark to the mind of the owl. "I think I may have the solution," he smiled.

"What is it? Speak up!" his friends said.

"I believe," started the owl, "this creature is frightened of us. And because of his fear, he can't say what he'd like to. Words just can't seem to form in his mouth."

"You mean his tongue is tied," asked the raccoon.

"In a manner of speaking," answered the owl.

"So let's act casual and as friendly as possible."

They all agreed. Some came over to shake the animal's hand. Some offered the animal some food. And the hyena who was the friendliest of all came over and slammed the animal on his back...

"GULPPP!" went the animal as he was slammed, and...

POPPP!

A little frog popped out of his throat.

"Oh, thank you, thank you, thank you," said the animal. "That frog has been in my throat since last April. What a relief to have it out!"

All of the animals of Ace County started to laugh. The animal was not strange at all, and now he was able to talk right. But suddenly the laughing stopped. They heard the little frog say:

"Gfnkhjlk!"
